Overview

The Financial Services Industry has entered the Artificial Intelligence (AI) phase of the digital marathon, a journey that started with the advent of the internet and has taken organisations through several stages of digitalisation. AI is an area of computer science that emphasises on the creation of intelligent machines that work and perform tasks like humans. These applications are able to teach themselves, organise and interpret information to make predictions based on this information. The HKIB collaborated with the Hong Kong Computer Society to organise a free membership event to gather banks' CIOs to discuss how AI has become an essential part of technology in the Banking, Financial Services and Insurance Industry, and how it is changing the way products and services are offered.
